Radical Politics

Idaho Arrests Muslim Students Under Scrutiny

By Paul M. Barrett

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

S T O O K S G O E D 2 0 0 0

SHENYANG, CHINA--The security forces at the Dalain Wild Animal Market have been busy padding their pockets recently with newfound fees. A permit for entry has jumped to $120,000 a year during his appeals.

What's News

Business & Finance

World-Wide

STOCKS SOARED on investor optimism that low interest rates would lift the struggling world economy and consumer confidence could boost the housing sector, which has been a recent drag on U.S. growth. The Dow Jones Industrials rose 5.6%, or 570.21 points, to 10,790.25. The S&P 500 index gained 7.3%, or 73.61 points, to 1,058.55, its highest level in almost six years. The Nasdaq Composite surged 8.7%, or 184.28 points, to 2,244.40, the most in almost three years.

Consumer confidence rose to 112 in May, the highest level in seven months, the Conference Board said. The reading was above the 111.2 recorded in April and above the 110.9 needed to signal a solid economic expansion.

Consumer sentiment to 112

In Shenzhen, China, Wild-Animal Market Eludes a Crackdown

With a SARS Virus

Don’t Fear a Taste for Snake, Pigeon

By Matthew Potts

In Shenzhen, a city of 12 million in southern China, the wild animal market has been bustling despite the spread of the SARS virus. Food prices are rising, and some of the city’s poorest residents are turning to the market as a way of coping with rising costs.

Some of the animals for sale include snakes, pigeons, and other birds, as well as frogs, turtles, and some reptiles. The market is open from early morning until late at night, offering a wide range of alternative protein sources for residents.

The market is located in the city’s Futian District, near the Shenzhen Bay Port Authority. It is one of several such markets in the city, and it has become a focal point for concerns about the spread of disease.

The market's popularity has stirred up controversy, with some residents expressing concern about the potential for the spread of the SARS virus. However, others argue that it is simply a reflection of the city's diverse population and cultural traditions.

Some of the animals for sale include snakes, pigeons, and other birds, as well as frogs, turtles, and some reptiles. The market is open from early morning until late at night, offering a wide range of alternative protein sources for residents.

The market is located in the city’s Futian District, near the Shenzhen Bay Port Authority. It is one of several such markets in the city, and it has become a focal point for concerns about the spread of the SARS virus. However, others argue that it is simply a reflection of the city's diverse population and cultural traditions.

The market's popularity has stirred up controversy, with some residents expressing concern about the potential for the spread of the SARS virus. However, others argue that it is simply a reflection of the city's diverse population and cultural traditions.

Some of the animals for sale include snakes, pigeons, and other birds, as well as frogs, turtles, and some reptiles. The market is open from early morning until late at night, offering a wide range of alternative protein sources for residents.

The market is located in the city’s Futian District, near the Shenzhen Bay Port Authority. It is one of several such markets in the city, and it has become a focal point for concerns about the spread of the SARS virus. However, others argue that it is simply a reflection of the city's diverse population and cultural traditions.

The market’s popularity has stirred up controversy, with some residents expressing concern about the potential for the spread of the SARS virus. However, others argue that it is simply a reflection of the city's diverse population and cultural traditions.

Some of the animals for sale include snakes, pigeons, and other birds, as well as frogs, turtles, and some reptiles. The market is open from early morning until late at night, offering a wide range of alternative protein sources for residents.

The market is located in the city’s Futian District, near the Shenzhen Bay Port Authority. It is one of several such markets in the city, and it has become a focal point for concerns about the spread of the SARS virus. However, others argue that it is simply a reflection of the city's diverse population and cultural traditions.

Some of the animals for sale include snakes, pigeons, and other birds, as well as frogs, turtles, and some reptiles. The market is open from early morning until late at night, offering a wide range of alternative protein sources for residents.

The market is located in the city’s Futian District, near the Shenzhen Bay Port Authority. It is one of several such markets in the city, and it has become a focal point for concerns about the spread of the SARS virus. However, others argue that it is simply a reflection of the city's diverse population and cultural traditions.

Some of the animals for sale include snakes, pigeons, and other birds, as well as frogs, turtles, and some reptiles. The market is open from early morning until late at night, offering a wide range of alternative protein sources for residents.

The market is located in the city’s Futian District, near the Shenzhen Bay Port Authority. It is one of several such markets in the city, and it has become a focal point for concerns about the spread of the SARS virus. However, others argue that it is simply a reflection of the city's diverse population and cultural traditions.

Some of the animals for sale include snakes, pigeons, and other birds, as well as frogs, turtles, and some reptiles. The market is open from early morning until late at night, offering a wide range of alternative protein sources for residents.

The market is located in the city’s Futian District, near the Shenzhen Bay Port Authority. It is one of several such markets in the city, and it has become a focal point for concerns about the spread of the SARS virus. However, others argue that it is simply a reflection of the city's diverse population and cultural traditions.
Housing Buys the Economy, Which Is No Surprise to Greenspan

Consumer First Page

Continued From First Page

Deadly cancer at 23. Complete remission at 24.

Chinese Market Eludes Crackdown

If her cancer had happened a few years ago, Erin might be dead now. But she was lucky. Novartis put her deadly cancer into remission quickly. If her cancer had happened a few years ago, Erin might be dead now. But she was lucky. Novartis put her deadly cancer into remission quickly. It was increasingly apparent that banks, far greater than stocks deepened, housing prices continued to...