UK hopes students forgive gaffe

ría STRIDES TO OVERCOME COMMENTS AND ITS IMAGE

Would you pay $20 for an ice cube tray?

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.

Crystal Leach, left, and Tonisha Broadus, seniors at Adair County High School in Louisville, attended a University of Louisville recruiter visit last week. She had never even gone to a football game or even considered going to a university. She was thinking of the University of Kentucky.

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.

Crystal Leach, left, and Tonisha Broadus, seniors at Adair County High School in Louisville, attended a University of Louisville recruiter visit last week. She had never even gone to a football game or even considered going to a university. She was thinking of the University of Kentucky.

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.

Crystal Leach, left, and Tonisha Broadus, seniors at Adair County High School in Louisville, attended a University of Louisville recruiter visit last week. She had never even gone to a football game or even considered going to a university. She was thinking of the University of Kentucky.

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.

Crystal Leach, left, and Tonisha Broadus, seniors at Adair County High School in Louisville, attended a University of Louisville recruiter visit last week. She had never even gone to a football game or even considered going to a university. She was thinking of the University of Kentucky.

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.

Crystal Leach, left, and Tonisha Broadus, seniors at Adair County High School in Louisville, attended a University of Louisville recruiter visit last week. She had never even gone to a football game or even considered going to a university. She was thinking of the University of Kentucky.

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.

Crystal Leach, left, and Tonisha Broadus, seniors at Adair County High School in Louisville, attended a University of Louisville recruiter visit last week. She had never even gone to a football game or even considered going to a university. She was thinking of the University of Kentucky.

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.

Crystal Leach, left, and Tonisha Broadus, seniors at Adair County High School in Louisville, attended a University of Louisville recruiter visit last week. She had never even gone to a football game or even considered going to a university. She was thinking of the University of Kentucky.

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.

Crystal Leach, left, and Tonisha Broadus, seniors at Adair County High School in Louisville, attended a University of Louisville recruiter visit last week. She had never even gone to a football game or even considered going to a university. She was thinking of the University of Kentucky.

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.

Crystal Leach, left, and Tonisha Broadus, seniors at Adair County High School in Louisville, attended a University of Louisville recruiter visit last week. She had never even gone to a football game or even considered going to a university. She was thinking of the University of Kentucky.

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.

Crystal Leach, left, and Tonisha Broadus, seniors at Adair County High School in Louisville, attended a University of Louisville recruiter visit last week. She had never even gone to a football game or even considered going to a university. She was thinking of the University of Kentucky.

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.

Crystal Leach, left, and Tonisha Broadus, seniors at Adair County High School in Louisville, attended a University of Louisville recruiter visit last week. She had never even gone to a football game or even considered going to a university. She was thinking of the University of Kentucky.

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.

Crystal Leach, left, and Tonisha Broadus, seniors at Adair County High School in Louisville, attended a University of Louisville recruiter visit last week. She had never even gone to a football game or even considered going to a university. She was thinking of the University of Kentucky.

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.

Crystal Leach, left, and Tonisha Broadus, seniors at Adair County High School in Louisville, attended a University of Louisville recruiter visit last week. She had never even gone to a football game or even considered going to a university. She was thinking of the University of Kentucky.

The Pentagon does, though a year earlier, it bought them for 85 cents from a manufacturer.

PROSPECTIVE students should think twice before paying $20 for an ice cube tray.