From Diversity to Inclusivity
Behaviors are as important as words

Most organizations talk about the vital importance of diverse perspectives in driving organizational success. But when it comes to creating an inclusive culture for their diverse workforces, they often fall short.

According to a global survey conducted by PwC in 2017, 87% of respondents indicated that diversity and inclusion was a stated value or priority for their organizations; and yet, nearly half believed that diversity was actually a barrier to employee progression.

The fact is, actions can speak louder than words and, without a sincere and deep-rooted culture of equity and inclusion, diversity can lead swiftly to employee disillusion and organizational dysfunction.

“Building a truly inclusive leadership culture means changing the everyday behaviors of individuals and the organizational and social systems in which they work. It requires a shift in both mind- and skill-sets but the value to the organization can be transformative.”

Program Faculty Director

Program Faculty

Bernardo M. Ferdman Ph.D. is the Program Faculty Director. He is an organizational psychologist, leadership coach, author and professor with more than 30 years of experience working on inclusion.

Heather Caruso Ph.D. is Assistant Dean for Equity, Diversity and Inclusion, and Adjunct Assistant Professor of Management and Organizations at UCLA Anderson.

Miguel Unzueta Ph.D. is Senior Associate Dean of MBA Programs and Professor of Management and Organizations at UCLA Anderson focusing on diversity, bias, and discrimination.

The Impact

LEARNING OBJECTIVES & OUTCOMES

- Understand how inclusion differs from diversity, and why it is critical to your success as a leader
- Learn strategies to harness the power of diversity and translate them to your organizational context
- Practice behaviors that are essential for any inclusive leader

You will also:

- Apply best practices and research for building inclusivity tailored to the needs of your teams and organization
- Deepen your awareness and understanding of the multiple facets of our personal identities and their potential contributions to individual and collective power at work
- Learn key ways to support all members of your organization in bringing their full power and skills to the workplace
- Develop and practice skills for communicating about and leading on inclusion and diversity in your organization and with its various stakeholders
The Participants

The program benefits participants with different spheres of organizational responsibility.

Any leader held accountable for modeling and promoting a culture of inclusion to drive enterprise success should consider attending.

Don is the COO for a US-based global engineering company that has just acquired a major European competitor. Suspicion is rife among the acquired company’s workforce and integration of two very different cultures has stalled.

Gwen is vice president of sales for a financial services firm that is expanding its online products to target urban millennials. Recruiting and skilling up her team to effectively compete in this new market is top of her mind.

Luc is a recent hire at a tech startup that recruits heavily internationally. His background is as a star individual contributor in the ‘gig economy’. The company has big plans for him, but Luc has little experience working as part of a team and none as an employee in a highly diverse workforce.

- Those whose responsibilities include organizational strategy, HR, learning & development and leading diverse teams will find the program particularly valuable.
- The program is a great opportunity for organizations to send cross-functional teams, which will work collectively to develop best practices around inclusivity and a game plan for their successful implementation back in the workplace.
